2019 Gratitude Report

Together, we build strength, stability, and self-reliance through shelter.
YOU make the life-changing experience of homeownership possible for families throughout King County.

Dear friends and supporters,

We are blessed to live in such a beautiful, vibrant, and innovative part of the country. This region is also burdened with housing prices that have soared so high in recent years, many hard-working families can’t afford to buy their own home.

During my first year as CEO of Habitat for Humanity Seattle-King County, it has been a great pleasure to work with so many loyal supporters like you, who share our determination to face this challenge head-on. Undaunted. You stand with us every step of the way, from the moment we break ground at a build site to the day we hand a family the keys to their new home. You stand with us when obstacles emerge, forcing us to dig deep and collaborate on solutions.

There’s nothing easy about building affordable housing in such a high-cost area. Over the past 30 years, Habitat has built, renovated and repaired homes locally for more than 2,000 people. And there’s no way we could do it without your support.

Thank you for standing with us as we forge ahead with exciting projects in Lake City and Fort Lawton. We are extremely grateful we can count on your continued support as we make homeownership a hard-fought reality for dozens of more families in the coming years.

Sincerely,

Brett D'Antonio

Celebrating Sammamish

With support from tireless volunteers and generous donors, Habitat families move into our newest development of affordable homes

Three years of construction came to a celebratory close at our newest affordable housing community this past June, when 10 families received keys to their homes in Sammamish.

With the help of more than 1,600 volunteers, we built the picturesque cluster of two-story cottages on land donated by the City of Sammamish, where the wait list for low-income housing can stretch up to five years long.

“These 10 homes provide a safe and stable place to live for many generations here in Sammamish,” Habitat Seattle-King County Brett D’Antonio told dozens of people who gathered to dedicate the homes in June.

“These days, a lot of us don’t know our neighbors, but these families do. They’ve been out here together for the last few years, putting in a significant amount of sweat equity alongside our volunteers, building their own community. And today, it is theirs.”

— Brett D’Antonio, Habitat for Humanity Seattle-King County CEO

Habitat Veterans’ Community Completed

We also proudly completed Megan’s Meadow, a community of nine homes in Pacific, WA for veterans of the U.S. Armed Forces. An estimated 17,000 current and former U.S. members of the U.S. military in King County live 200% below the federal poverty level.
From devastating setback to dream come true

_Habitat volunteers step up for homebuyer at a time of need_

Chinh Vo was driving home from a Habitat homebuyer class one night, when the right side of his body went limp. Fearful and frantic, he managed to pull over to the side of the freeway. The driver behind him did too, then called an ambulance that rushed Chinh to a hospital.

Days after the devastating stroke, doctors leveled with Chinh. They weren’t sure he was going to survive the bleeding in his brain.

“It was terrifying,” Chinh recalls, “but by the grace of God, I made it through.”

For the next several months, Chinh had to focus all his energy on healing, giving his brain time to rewire itself. After months in a wheelchair, he graduated to a cane, slowly relearning how to walk. It pained him that he couldn’t work on his house. He’d been so eager to hammer away alongside Habitat volunteers and staff. He worried that he wouldn’t be able to meet his sweat equity obligations — until several volunteers stepped up to log extra hours on his behalf.

“We didn’t have to think twice,” says Habitat volunteer Katy Girard. “We were all extremely happy we could do this for Chinh.”

A native of Vietnam who immigrated to the U.S. with his family when he was a young boy, Chinh has made huge and steady strides in his recovery. He’s returned to work at Seattle Children’s Hospital, where he raises funds for childhood cancer research. Chinh is expected to make a full recovery and looks forward to the day when he’s strong enough to help build another family’s Habitat home.

“God gave me a second chance,” Chinh said, shedding tears of joy and gratitude at the dedication of the Sammamish Cottage community where he now lives.

“I want to make the best of it, with my neighbors, here in this community.”

— Chinh Vo, Habitat Partner
Having Habitat come in and help us, as well as learning how to do these repairs was huge! We wouldn’t be living in Seattle if we hadn’t bought this house and had help from Habitat to keep it in shape.”

— Charmaine Slaven, Habitat Repair Program Participant

Habitat repairs make a house feel more like home

Charmaine Slaven and Charlie Beck knew the small house they bought during the depths of the Great Recession needed some fixing up. They figured they’d chip away at repairs, but quickly realized that they needed help. It seemed every project revealed the need for another.

It was overwhelming — until they learned about Habitat’s home repair program. They were thrilled to qualify and eagerly worked alongside Habitat staff and volunteers on much-needed repairs, grateful for every new skill they honed.

They helped remove their back deck, riddled with rotting wood, and later replaced it themselves. They got their roof replaced, as well as an electrical mast that had been improperly installed, posing a serious fire hazard. The new roof made it possible for the couple to invest in solar panels, which has significantly reduced their energy costs.

Earlier this year, they qualified for a second round of Habitat repairs and helped update the siding, gutters and fencing around their house, among other renovations.

Charmaine and Charlie, who work as teaching and performing musicians with an old-time variety band called Squirrel Butter, are grateful for all Habitat has done to help them make their house feel more like home.
Habitat for Humanity’s unique model of homeownership ensures that every house we sell remains affordable for Habitat families for years to come.

How is that possible? Habitat homebuyers purchase their house and lease the land from Habitat, as part of an agreement that typically runs for 99 years. Resale restrictions give Habitat first rights to buy the house back. We call that “affordable home recycling.”

For many families, a home purchased through Habitat lays such a solid foundation for financial stability, they’re able to build up the equity and savings to buy a home on the conventional market, allowing their Habitat home to be “recycled” back into the affordable housing market.

“It’s always a joy to see families take this second step in their journey as homeowners, selling it back to us so another Habitat family can begin their own journey in homeownership,” says Donna Adair, homeowner services manager.

Elham Abad and Babak Afshar first volunteered with Habitat, then purchased a home and sold it back to Habitat two years later, when they’d each moved up to higher-paying jobs and qualified for a conventional mortgage. They’re deeply grateful for the opportunities Habitat opened up for them.

“Getting to know Habitat for Humanity through volunteering, purchasing a home, living in a great community in Redmond, and then ‘recycling’ the home and providing opportunity for another family ... the whole experience was incredible!”

— Elham Abad, Former Habitat Homeowner

Habitat strengthens a community in more ways than one
Volunteer, donor and Board member Tim Lieb explains how Habitat's work reaches beyond homeowner families

For Tim Lieb, market president of Regence BlueShield and a Habitat volunteer, donor and Board member, Habitat represents “community.” He speaks of how every single person involved in a build or repair project – whether staff member, contractor, volunteer, architect, AmeriCorps member, or homeowner – has an incredible passion for the mission. Tim has seen first-hand how working together with a singular focus, they strengthen not just a neighborhood, but the broader community.

“When you witness the dedication of people from all walks of life who come together to build or restore something that lasts a lifetime, it’s a testament to the power we have to change people’s lives forever – and it also changes us,” he said.

Tim points to the region’s robust job market and economy, which has made it increasingly difficult for many to afford housing close to where they work. Habitat’s homeownership and repair programs are critical in breaking the cycle of homelessness and providing people the ability to stay in their homes.

“In so many cases, folks just need a little help. They are grateful for the chance to put in the work to make it happen,” he said. “I think we can all point to a time in our lives when someone lent us a hand in some way. That is at the crux of what Habitat does.”

Further, as the leader of a large Puget Sound area healthcare organization, Tim sees housing and health as intertwined.

“The data clearly shows that social determinants affect overall health in a community, and while the U.S. spends more than any other country on healthcare, it falls behind others in funding social programs,” he said.

“Having a home and the stability that comes with it has a positive effect on overall wellness in a community, and thus reduces overall healthcare spending. Habitat’s impact on a community cannot be overstated.”

– Tim Lieb, Board Member, Habitat and President, Regence Blue Shield
Your support makes a huge impact Over the past 30 years, thanks to the support of loyal donors like you, Habitat for Humanity Seattle-King County has created 592 housing solutions serving nearly 2,000 people. Here’s a look at the impact you made during our 2019 fiscal year.

Habitat’s New Community in Seattle
Lake City, North Seattle

Our newest community in Seattle's Lake City neighborhood will be our first development within Seattle city limits in more than six years. The complex will provide 16 families — an estimated 66 people, including children — with townhome residences that will be within a 30-minute commute to downtown Seattle, walking distance to retail shops and services, excellent nearby schools, and a caring, eco-friendly community in which to live.

Habitat Pacific II
Pacific, South King County

With three additional homes being built in Pacific, this project will add much-needed affordable housing stock to the southern part of King County. The homes slated will be some of the only new, permanent, single-family housing solutions affordable for low-income families.

Fort Lawton
Magnolia neighborhood, Seattle

We are very proud to have been selected by the city of Seattle to partner in developing Fort Lawton, a former Army outpost and adjacent to one of the city’s largest parks. We have set our sights on providing an incredible 52 Habitat homes, which would make Fort Lawton the largest community ever built by Habitat for Humanity Seattle-King County.

La Fortuna
Renton, Southeast King County

Next year, we will start work on 12 additional homes in our La Fortuna development in east Renton, where we finished 23 townhouses in 2017. Six 4-bedroom and six 3-bedroom units will bring the total number of homes at La Fortuna to 35, creating some of the only new, permanent, single-family housing solutions suitable and affordable for low-income families in this part of Southeast King County.

Neighborhood Revitalization
Seattle-King County Area
In the Westway neighborhood of Federal Way, where we’ve focused much of our home repair efforts, homeowners have seen crime rates and domestic violence rates go down. Similar community-centered work in Seattle’s Rainier Valley, White Center and Renton is enabling low-income and senior residents to remain in the homes they’ve loved for years, while also motivating other homeowners in the neighborhood to make improvements in their houses.

Habitat’s New Community in Sammamish
Sammamish, East King County
In a town where the wait list for affordable apartments is up to five years long, we completed a 10-home community in Sammamish in June. With the incredible support of volunteers, donors, families, and the surrounding community, the single-family, 2- to 4-bedroom cottage-style homes are now a place for more than 40 people, over half of them children.

Looking to Lake City, Fort Lawton and beyond

We’re excited about the 16 townhomes we’re building in the Lake City neighborhood in north Seattle. It’s our first new home construction project inside Seattle city limits in six years. These eco-friendly homes will be placed into a land trust that ensures permanent affordability for future generations.

We’re immensely grateful to the many supporters who have rallied around the most ambitious project in Habitat for Humanity Seattle-King County’s history: 52 row houses and townhomes for low-income homeowners at Fort Lawton, the former Army Reserve Center in Seattle’s Magnolia neighborhood. It’s an honor to be a part of a $90 million redevelopment plan the City Council unanimously approved in June. The plan includes an additional 185 affordable units to be built by Catholic Housing Services: 85 supportive housing units for homeless seniors and veterans, at or below 31 percent of area median income, and 100 affordable rental units.

“This town has grown so fast, and housing and housing affordability have become the crisis of our time... We have to change that, and we have to change that in every part of our city.”

– Mayor Jenny Durkan, on Seattle’s housing crisis

1 in 7 Washington households spend half or more of their income on housing

This forces families to make impossible choices. A safe home. Nutritious food on the table. Health care. Access to good schools. Reliable transportation.

Help Habitat make the COST OF HOME something we can all afford.

Take a stand with Habitat for Humanity Seattle-King County and affiliates across the country to push for policies that will make affordable housing accessible to more families.

LEARN MORE AT HABITATSKC.ORG/COST-OF-HOME-2019 or reach out to Ryan Donohue, WA State Advocacy and Policy Director at ryan@habitatwa.org or (206) 577-7949.
The top five ways you can make a difference with Habitat

1. DONATE We rely on the tax-deductible financial contributions from caring individuals, foundations and corporations to buy land, compensate skilled construction craftspeople, purchase materials and fund infrastructure expenses.
   www.habitatkc.org/donate

2. VOLUNTEER There’s nothing more fulfilling than picking up a paintbrush, hammer or saw to build a new future for Habitat homeowners.
   www.habitatkc.org/volunteer

3. SHOP Visit one of our home improvement stores in Auburn, Bellevue or Southcenter to find everything you need to remodel or revitalize your home.
   www.habitatkc.org/store

4. GIVE Contribute your gently-used or extra bathroom fixtures, lighting, furniture, tiles, appliances, tools or other home improvement items for resale in our stores.
   www.habitatkc.org/store

5. LEARN Find out more about the impact you can make on building strength, stability and self-reliance through shelter when you engage with Habitat for Humanity.
